I hope the Microsoft Settlement truly remedies the anti-trust nature of Microsoft's dominance of the operating system and software market. In order to ensure that they receive more than a slap on the wrist, a meaningful action must be taken which will ensure competitiveness. Any settlement must require Microsoft "to standardize and publicize the entire set of Windows APIs and the file formats of its Office applications (another key to Microsoft's monopoly "lock-in") -- with the express goal of allowing competitors to build Windows software applications, and operating systems, that compete with Microsoft on a level field," as Scott Rosenberg has previously stated. Such a requirement would truly make the Anti-Trust Division worthy of its noble origins.

Respectfully,
